

Symposium of Civic Engagement
Wells College
Aurora, NY
February 28, 2003

Wells College:

At Wells, professors teach their academic specialties and work closely with students to connect knowledge learned in the classroom to careers and graduate study. Students have abundant opportunities to work on original research with faculty members, study abroad in many different locations, hold a wide variety of internships, and participate in meaningful community service activities. Wells students receive credit for experiential learning and are also awarded scholarships to fund these activities.

Who Controls Our Food: The Public Seed Initiative: A unique partnership for healthier food, healthier farming:

Dr. Molly Jahn along with Michael Glos, Mark Henning, Teri Ferrin, Matt Falise, George Moriarty and Brynda Beeman appeared to represent the PSI team. Dr. Jahn talked about the PSI as an attempt to extend the benefits of public investments in plant breeding to several classes of US agricultural producers hit hardest by the consolidation and globalization of the world seed trade.

There were approximately 50 Wells College students and faculty present during this hour long lunch time presentation.
